This woodblock print illustration depicts a lively indoor gathering in a traditional Japanese setting. In the center, a low fire pit (irori) provides warmth. To the upper left, a man stands holding a large bowl, possibly serving tea or food. Opposite him, another man sits reading a long document. Below them, several figures are engaged in various activities: one plays a shamisen (three-stringed lute), others hold folding fans (sensu), and some appear to be in conversation. The scene is filled with numerous small text labels in kanji, which likely identify the objects, actions, or specific individuals depicted. The style is characteristic of Edo-period book illustrations, with bold lines and a focus on narrative detail.
